

BRIEFING NOTES

Christian Education is a registered charity and a company limited by guarantee as Christian Education Movement. It has a turnover of about £1m p.a. It incorporates the work of Christian Education Movement (CEM) and the National Christian Education Council (NCEC) and has been running as a merged enterprise since September 2002. The charity has a Christian foundation and the Chief Executive is required to be a practicing Christian.

The charity supports teachers of Religious Education in schools through RE Today Services and by hosting the subject teachers' association National Association of Teachers of Religious Education (NATRE). In this aspect it produces educational materials on the Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Islamic, Jewish, and Sikh faiths. It works with Education workers in churches and Christian agencies particularly those working with children and young people and those involved in bible study. The charity is the successor to the National Sunday Schools Union. It publishes annual programmes of bible reading notes under the imprint of International Bible Reading Association (IBRA). It is a partner in the separate charitable company Roots for Churches Ltd. which publishes preaching notes and curriculum materials based on the Revised Common Lectionary.

Christian Education is governed by a Board of Trustees, who also serve as directors of the company. There are two main committees to oversee the publications and schools elements of the business. There is a Trustee Board of 12 members with John Keast in the chair. The board is appointed at an Annual General Meeting. Those eligible to vote at the AGM are the "membership" limited to 75 representatives of one of the four categories – Church denominations, Ancillary bodies, Individuals, Other interested organisations (e.g. CAFOD and Christian Aid). Peter Fishpool as Chief Executive brought the merged charity into being, starting work in October 2001.

Christian Education employs 15 staff (not all full time). Ten staff work out of an office in Selly Oak, Birmingham. They are principally engaged on management, publishing, sales and administration. Five schools' advisers work from their homes providing, consultancy, conferences, courses, and writing materials for use in schools. The charity makes frequent use of some free-lance contractors – for project work, financial advice, illustrations, rights searches and editorial services.

The staff team comprises:

Chief Executive.

Director of Professional Services.

Office Manager/PA to the Chief Executive.

Three staff covering administration, subscriptions, course bookings, sales orders and despatch.

Publications Team Leader/Editor.

Marketing Manager.

Four other schools' advisers

Finance Officer.

Designer/Production Controller.

Church Publications Development Officer.

For schools the charity's 'flagship' magazine is the termly REtoday magazine which is distributed to almost 4,000 subscribers. There are thirteen variations of subscription package. Some of these also include the British Journal of Religious Education, also owned by the charity but handled since January 2004 by the academic journal specialists Taylor and Francis.

For churches the 'flagship' is the IBRA imprint which sells 18,000 copies of its annual bible reading notes. The charity also works with Roots for Churches Ltd, the Consultative Group on Ministry with Children. It is a Body in Association of Churches Together in Britain and Ireland, Churches Together in England and Action by Churches Together in Scotland.

Christian Education sells direct through the mail, over the web, by occasional exhibition stands, conferences and special events. On the education side it also markets through its schools advisers working from their homes around England. On the publications side it also markets through (mostly Christian) bookshops. Sales are handled in our Birmingham office, while stock is stored and dispatched (on contract) from a warehouse in Stowmarket.

There are two endowed funds, one offering interest free loans for member churches building to extend facilities for children and young people. The other offers bursary aid to churches taking children and young people on holiday trips. A cash fund is slowly being spent on bursaries for young adults travelling internationally for Christian study.

The charity works in association with a distinct charitable trust, the Montgomery Trust, to sponsor theologically based lectures in colleges, schools and societies. A Company of Speakers which has been separate, was included within CE from 1 Sept 2004 it supports taking outside speakers into schools currently in Lancashire.

Christian Education works in partnership with CEM Northern Ireland, Religious Education Movement Scotland and Religious Education Movement Wales.
